

North Nashville

Carnegie Library

Pittsburgh steel tycoon and philanthropist Andrew Carnegie left a legacy of having funded over 2,500 libraries around the world, including four in Nashville. Today, only two Carnegie libraries remain in Nashville (the North and East branches of the Metro Public Library). The North Branch was opened in 1915, making it the oldest of Nashville's currently existing library buildings. Its interior floors, woodwork, and the checkout desk are all original, and there is also an auditorium in the lower level with its original 1915 stage.
